Crowds break records, but some glad it's over

Although it started out a little slower than last year, the Calgary Stampede went out with a bang this weekend.

With attendance lower than last year going into the weekend, weekend attendance record-breakers catapulted the Calgary Stampede back on par, according to spokesperson Doug Fraser.

"While numbers are important, what is more important is the experience and people are very satisfied with their experience this year," he said, adding the perfect weekend weather was a huge contributor to the high numbers.

record attendance

Friday, July 11	2008 – 145, 192
	2007 – 129, 203
Saturday, July 12	2008 – 170, 265
	2007 – 142, 938
Sunday July 13	2007 – 117, 180

(2008 not available at press time)

Fraser said more than 700 people were surveyed upon exiting the park and an incredible 96 per cent indicated the Stampede met or exceeded their expectations.

"That's quite a high number and we're really happy and proud to have given visitors a wonderful visit."

With tens of thousands flipping the turnstiles every day it also brought traffic congestion and noise to the surrounding areas.

And 32-year-old Calgarian Derek Burynuik said while he enjoyed the Stampede, he is happy the 10 days are over.

"I can't wait for all of the tourists to leave so Calgary can go back to normal now," he said.

With a stellar lineup of musical talents at the Saddledome including Kid Rock and Sugarland, as well as popular acts in Nashville North and the Coca-Cola stage, many came for just the music.

First time Stampeder Christine Strong said although she enjoyed the music, she wished she could have seen more acts.

"I got to see a lot of different things. But it was incredibly expensive," she said. "So I couldn't come as much as I wanted to."

Charges likely against teens in rollover

POLICE Charges are expected to be laid against the 17-year-old driver after a car rolled several times in the city's northeast yesterday.

Paramedics responded to the multiple rollover crash along Country Hill Boulevard and Airport Trail NE around 4 p.m. and transported two 17-year-olds to the hospital in stable condition.

Duty Insp. Dave Wood told Metro charges are expected against the teens.

"Speeding was definitely a factor, but we're not sure about alcohol yet. Charges will be laid definitely, we're just not sure which ones yet," he added.

Rights group organizing petition following Stampede

KRISTA SYLVESTER

Ignorance may be bliss but it is unacceptable for the city to blindly support the "barbaric" calf-roping event at the Stampede, according to a local protest group.

Animal rights activists gathered outside the Calgary Stampede to protest what they call the exploitation of animals used in the rodeo.

"We're not trying to shut down the Stampede. We know the people enjoy it and it brings the city a lot of money," protestor Heather Anderson told Metro. "But we want to see an end to the animal cruelty."

Ideally, Anderson and other animal activists would like to see a Calgary Stampede without the rodeo, but are setting their sights on an end to the tie-down roping event.

ROBIN KUNISKI/FOR METRO CALGARY

Animal rights activists worked the pavement at the LRT station outside Stampede Park yesterday, protesting the cruelty they say exists during the 10-day event.

"The whole rodeo isn't good for the animals, but the most barbaric and cruel event is the calf-roping. Who would want to bring their kids to see those poor little things getting hurt?"

The Calgary Animal Rights Meet up Group is organizing a petition in favour of banning the tie-down roping at the Calgary Stampede.

Calgary Stampede spokesperson Doug Fraser said the animals are treated not only properly, but like one of the family.

"We have always treated our animals very well, like rock stars, and we will continue to keep treating them well," he told Metro.

Change afoot for panhandle signs

NEIL MACKINNON
neil.mackinnon@metronews.ca

It's a sign of the times.

As the light at 17 Ave. and 14 St. SW turns green, Larry Dumont, 50, tucks away his sign and heads for the curb.

Dumont said he's never been hit while weaving through traffic over the past 43 years in search of "spare change," and thinks a revised bylaw, to be considered by the city Wednesday, seeking to formally prohibit panhandling by sign, is typical.

"Lower class people get screwed all the time, it's nothing new," Dumont said, adding the city should license panhandlers if they want to regulate them.

Bylaw boss Bill Bruce said while soliciting spare change through signs at intersections is a relatively new phenomenon in Calgary, new bylaw wording should help bring it to a screeching halt.

"We don't want you out in the middle of the street, cornering people for money. They're trapped in their cars and I know from personal experience, some of these people asking for money can be quite aggressive," said Bruce. "It boils down to an issue of safety."

Alderman warns against crime stat hype

REPORT While a local alderman applauds a recent police study indicating reported crime rates decreasing, he urges Calgarians to be cautious of the hype.

Calgary police released their 2007 report to the community numbers showing reported crime on the decline in the city.

"While the numbers are good to hear and I commend the work police are doing, I think people shouldn't put too much credibility into statistics," Ward 12 Ald. Ric McIver told Metro.

McIver said the police report to the community could be misleading, as could any statistic reports, because of the ways numbers are collected. For instance, if police conduct a crime crackdown, arrests would be up, thus signalling higher crime rates.

"What it comes down to is there are bad guys out there and there will always be bad guys," he said, adding it will be interesting to see which way the crime trend goes.

Crime Stoppers president Doug Fraser also commends the numbers but is reminding Calgarians to remain vigilant in reporting crimes.

"If we had a role in the numbers decreasing then we're very proud, but really the key thing here is reporting crimes," he said.

Woman walking to bring injustice to light

ALICIA FOX
for Metro Calgary

She walked across two provinces, arriving here in Calgary with 17 other Aboriginal women on a quest to raise awareness over injustices.

Now Rose Henry, from Victoria and back to this city for the first time in 30 years, hopes to find closure to her own past.

A public speaker, Henry joined the Walk 4 Justice as a woman who had survived brutal injustices and wanted to support the walk across Canada to Ottawa. When the group arrives in September, they'll be presenting a petition to Stephen Harper asking for more police involvement in the disappearances and murders of women, particularly along the Highway of Tears where mostly Aboriginal women have been targets of violence.

However, she decided to leave the group and embark on her own journey, mostly because of internal turmoil within the group.

"I don't think the group was prepared to deal with the emotional stuff that was coming up," she said. "We've all experienced being violated in some way."

Instead, she's now looking to find out what happened to her file from 1979 when she was a victim of a serial rapist. Picked up in Forest Lawn on her way to work late one night, she was ultimately left for dead in a dumpster.

"I left (Calgary) wounded not only emotionally, but spiritually and physically," Henry said, adding her husband often has to make awkward explanations about the scars that now run up her arms.

Her own injustices she counts as many, including the officers in the hospital she vaguely remembers calling her a "drunken Indian" to the doctors who thought her injuries were "all in her head."

Henry's passion has since turned to raising awareness over victim injustices.

"It (this walk) has been a long time coming," she said.

Fire dept. to ask for $43.6M for old fleet

NEIL MACKINNON
neil.mackinnon@metronews.ca

An aging fleet is causing some major concerns for Calgary's fire department.

At Wednesday's community and protective services committee meeting, the fire department will ask city council for $43.6 million over the next five years to deal with their greying fleet, which has 30 units that are 15 years or older.

Three of their 89 units have failed inspections, including two aerial ladder trucks, and have had to be taken out of action, while an additional 11 have undergone structural frame stress since last year, five have not been replaced.

"To provide an effective fire service, fire apparatus must meet industry standards for equipment, maintenance, lifecycle and safety,' said a report approved by Fire Chief Bruce Burrell. "Apparatus in service that do not meet these standards become a liability both for the municipality and the fire fighters staffing the apparatus."

Ald. Jim Stevenson, who sits on the committee, said new infrastructure demands have put maintenance of the existing fleet on the back burner, causing a "very great concern, now."

"They've been able to provide the service alright, they've been able to keep the vehicles running, but we're putting ourselves in a real bind as we move into the future, these trucks aren't getting any younger, it's a real problem,"he said.

What about other transit loiterers?

RE: MOSQUITO SWATTED? – JULY 11

Even if the devices are only activated by text messages at certain times, that still means that I, a 23-year-old, and any other paying person between 13 to 25 would have to put up with this high-frequency tone.

This program also does not help prevent the adult solicitors, drunks, or troublemakers that loiter in Calgary Transit stations and locations.

I don't want to have to put up with these devices (on the rare chance they install them) just because some people find it "cool" to hang out at a train stations.

RE: MOSQUITO SWATTED? – JULY 11.

While I think it's a good idea to do something about the loitering teens, the ultrasonic device will also affect me, a 19-year-old university student. Will this device be turned on only when teens are seen to be loitering?

I take transit because I want to help the environment and because it's easier and cheaper for me. But, if I have to start wearing earplugs to take the train because of this "whine," then I will start driving.

It is a tough situation because we need to stop loitering, and yet not affect others who take the train.

Under normal circumstances, Ottawa's Michael Bossin would be excited for the upcoming summer Olympic Games.

But the ongoing human rights situation in China has turned anticipation to disappointment, said the Amnesty International member.

"I had hoped the Olympics in China would improve the situation of human rights in the country, but by all accounts, things are worse.

It was a great opportunity for China to show its best side, but sadly, I think the opportunity has been lost."

Dozens of Amnesty supporters protested at Ottawa's Chinese Embassy yesterday to mark the seven-year anniversary of Beijing winning the 2008 Olympic Games.

"We want to … remind the Chinese government of their promise to improve human rights if they got the Olympics," said Lindsay Mossman, with Amnesty in Ottawa.

There were 6,000 executions in China last year, claimed Ian Heide, a volunteer with Amnesty in Ottawa.

Human rights advocates also protest the lack of fair trials, media censorship and the repression of activists, who are often detained for speaking out for human rights.

Ottawa animal cruelty case called 'horrifying'

A case that the Ottawa humane society calls "horrifying" will land in a city court today after the arrest on the weekend of a man accused of beating a cat to death and tossing another from an apartment balcony.

After a show cause hearing yesterday, Richard Holstein, 24, will appear back in Ottawa court at 1:30 p.m. today by video, said Detective Anne Menard of the Ottawa Police Partner Assault Section.

He had been arrested on Saturday evening.

Holstein is accused of breaking into his ex-girlfriend's Sandy Hill apartment on Wednesday and throwing one of her cats off a third-floor balcony and beating a second cat to death.

The cat thrown from the balcony, which was missing for several days, was later found and returned to its owner.

"This is a horrifying case," said Miriam Smith, manager of Emergency Animal Protection Services. "Unfortunately, this type of case seems to be on the rise.

Iranian threats grow

Ahmadinejad vows to strike down enemies

Iran's president said his country would strike its enemies before they managed to fire a shot, media reported yesterday, part of an escalating war of words on its nuclear ambitions fuelling Middle East tensions.

President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad echoed comments by other Iranian officials and commanders that Iran's response to any attack over its disputed nuclear programme would be quick.

"Before the enemies get their hands on the trigger the armed forces will cut off their hands," the official IRNA news agency quoted Ahmadinejad as telling reporters.

A senior Iranian official was quoted as saying on Saturday that Iran would destroy Israel and 32 U.S. military bases in the Middle East if the Islamic Republic was attacked.

The United States has refused to rule out military action if diplomacy fails to resolve the nuclear row. Washington says Tehran is seeking nuclear arms, a charge Iran denies, saying its aim is to generate electricity.

Israel, long assumed to have nuclear arms, has sworn to prevent Iran from attaining atomic weapons. An Israeli air force drill last month raised speculation it was planning an attack.

Iranian missile tests this week further stoked tension. Fears of military confrontation between Iran and Israel have helped to send global oil prices to record highs.

COOPERATION Leaders from Europe, North Africa and the Middle East launched a 43-nation Union for the Mediterranean yesterday pledging practical cooperation among erstwhile enemies on water, energy and education.

Urging Mediterranean states to emulate Europe's model of reconciliation and cooperation, French President Nicolas Sarkozy said the birth of the new organization that was his brainchild on taking office last year was "a dream come true."

The ceremonial inaugural summit in Paris sealed a new detente between Syria and Europe, with the Syrian and Israeli leaders sitting at the same table for the first time.

"Everyone will have to make an effort, as the Europeans did, to put an end to the deadly spiral of war and violence, that, century after century, repeatedly brought barbarity to the heart of civilisation," Sarkozy said in the keynote speech.

But there was no handshake and Syrian President Bashar al-Assad appeared to go out of his way to avoid Israeli Prime Minister Ehud Olmert.

Sailing into water problems

If you've been following news about the upcoming Beijing Olympic Games, you may have seen photos of thousands of workers trying to clean huge swaths of algae from the waters and beaches in co-host city Qingdao. The algae have proliferated more than one-third of waters where sailing events will be held.

This is not an unusual occurrence, but it is a symptom of an underlying problem with potential repercussions far more serious than hampering Olympic events or adding to the negative publicity surrounding China's Games. The blooms — along with a host of other problems — are caused by excessive amounts of nitrogen from sources such as road and industrial runoff, untreated sewage, and, most of all, fossil-fuel combustion and agricultural fertilizers.

Because it is a major component of proteins and the atmosphere, nitrogen is a vital element in the biosphere. In the soil, nitrogen stimulates growth in plants.

We can "fix" nitrogen from the air into fertilizer in a process that takes a lot of heat from fossil fuels.

Applied on farmers' fields, this artificial fertilizer induces plant growth, but scientists believe this has resulted in nitrogen entering the Earth's soils at more than twice its natural rate. This ripples out from the land to affect freshwater and marine ecosystems. Besides giving Chinese Olympic organizers headaches, algal outbreaks have also contaminated drinking-water supplies used by millions of people.

Excess nitrogen can also disrupt or change plant-growth patterns (including contributing to the spread of invasive species), poison freshwater environments, deprive ocean ecosystems of the oxygen needed to support aquatic life, and even contribute to global warming.

Because we know where much of the excess nitrogen in the environment comes from, we know how to reduce the levels.

First, we must cut back on fossil fuels. But we can also reduce our use of chemical fertilizers, in agriculture, on golf courses, and even in our own backyards.

We may not be able fix the problem in time for the 2008 Olympics, but we need to get on it now, or we'll have far bigger problems to contend with than where to hold Olympic sailing events.

'Dead zones'

- Scientists predict that a massive "dead zone" in the Gulf of Mexico will grow to more than 26,000 square kilometres — half the size of Nova Scotia — this summer because of excess nitrogen in the water.
- These dead zones are growing in size and number, with as many as 200 now believed to have formed in the Earth's oceans.

Women's soccer players getting ready for first appearance at Games

While members of Canada's women's soccer team say they're thrilled to be one of 12 teams taking part in the world's largest sporting event, their aspirations don't end with just participating.

"We want to win gold," said Christine Sinclair, 25, of Burnaby. "To come home with a medal would be a good result for us. We know that we can beat any team in the world if we play well."

Canada, which is ranked ninth in the world in women's soccer, is making its first appearance at the Games since women's soccer was included in 1996.

Head coach Even Pellerud said the team, most of whom have been in a national program residency in Vancouver for the past two years, have been steadily gearing up for tournament since qualifying April 12 with a victory over Mexico.

Canadian national team keeper Erin McLeod pounces on a ball during a scrimmage.

The team, he added, has played 18 or 19 international matches since January.

"You can train and train and train as much as you want," said Pellerud. "But if you cannot test it against the best teams in the world, you really are without answers."

Recently, Canada finished runner-up to the U.S., the top-ranked team in the world, at the 2008 Peace Queen Cup in Korea. Canada lost the hard-fought match 1-0, with the only goal coming in extra time.

The team, Pellerud said, has been to China a handful of times over the past couple of years to prepare for Beijing's notoriously poor air quality.

The trips allowed coaches to see how different players reacted to the pollution and which players may need inhalers.

"We have played or trained in those conditions many times now; there should be no surprises for us," he said.

"We know that we can beat any team in the world if we play well."
Christine Sinclair

Sinclair added that all of the teams will have to deal with the pollution. "It's going to be bad for everyone," she says.

Canada is in Group A and plays Argentina (ranked 27), China (ranked 14) and Sweden (ranked 3).

"All of a sudden it's really close," said Kara Lang, 21, of Oakville, Ont. "There's an excitement in the air and a different level of intensity as it gets closer.

"It's something I've dreamed about since I was a little girl," she says. "For any athlete, it's the ultimate dream."

The team tied Brazil 1-1 in a friendly Thursday at BMO Field in Toronto prior to heading to Singapore to get acclimatized to the heat before the Olympics.

Cancer won't keep swimmer away

SWIMMING American swimmer Eric Shanteau has been diagnosed with testicular cancer but still plans to race at the Beijing Olympics, U.S. Swimming said on Friday.

Shanteau qualified for a spot on the U.S. squad at last week's Olympic trials in Omaha, Neb., finishing second in the 200-metre breaststroke behind Scott Spann.

Chambers wins, awaits verdict

ATHLETICS Dwain Chambers achieved the first stage in his bid to run at the Beijing Olympics when he won the 100 metres final at the British trials on Saturday and must now await a legal ruling on his eligibility.

Chambers will find out on Wednesday if his lawyers have secured a temporary injunction against his lifetime ban which would make him eligible for the Olympics.

Tampa drops seventh game in a row to give up AL East lead to Boston

Indians baserunner Ryan Garko hangs on to second base after avoiding a tag from Tampa Bay Rays infielder Ben Zorbist in the eighth inning of their game yesterday in Cleveland.

The Rays now trail the Boston Red Sox by half a game in the division heading into the All-Star break.

The Rays' seven-game slide comes straight after a seven-game winning streak put them five games ahead of Boston.

"We totally massacred our seven-game winning streak," Tampa Bay manager Joe Maddon told reporters. "We have to do a better job on the road.

"This is six losses in a row on the road. We just have to do a better job on the road. We're two different teams."

Tampa is 36-14 at home and 19-25 on the road.

Maddon said he would not panic, though his young team appeared to be feeling the pressure of its unexpected success this season. Tampa Bay won just 66 games in 2007.

"I do feel good about that group," he said. "I will always feel good about that group."

Scott Kazmir gave up five runs on eight hits over six innings and took the loss as the Indians won their fourth successive game.

Five Cleveland pitchers held the Rays to just three hits, with Tom Mastny getting the win.

"It has been a great first half," Kazmir said. "There are going to be times like this in the season where we're going to go through a bump, a slow stage."

Boston took over first place with a 2-1 win over the Baltimore Orioles as Daisuke Matsuzaka pitched six shutout innings. REUTERS

Perry keeps cool for third win

American Kenny Perry won a three-way playoff to win the John Deere Classic at Silvis, Ill., yesterday and claim his third win in his last five PGA events.

Perry went into the final hole with a one-shot lead but made a hash of a chip to the green and bogeyed the 18th to leave him in a three-way playoff with Brad Adamonis and Jay Williamson.

The 47-year-old Perry kept his cool in the play-off, making a par while his two rivals found water and bogeyed.

Perry

"I felt like I gave it away and they gave it back to me. But I fought hard, produced key shots at the right time. That was a great win for me," said Perry.

Williamson's finish was enough to earn him an invitation to next week's British Open.

Organizers of the John Deere Classic, in order to attract the best possible field, had organized on a chartered plane to take players directly to Manchester to prepare for the Open.

Perry has already decided not to play the tournament, which starts at Royal Birkdale on Thursday and confirmed after yesterday's play he would not change his mind and would play instead in the Milwaukee Championship next week.

Perry, who focused his entire season on the Ryder Cup and was reluctant to change plans, has now risen to second in the FedEx Cup standings after adding to his victories at the Memorial Tournament and the Buick Open. REUTERS

Nursing 'crisis' to escalate

Continuing care industry may explode in next few years as baby boomers retire

RAFAEL BRUSILOW
for Metro Canada

With an aging population and not enough nurses entering the ranks to take care of them all, private and public health-care providers in Canada alike are bracing for a health-care crisis.

Experts say the numbers of elderly people who need help with the daily acts of living most of us take for granted like getting groceries, making meals and keeping healthy are growing and too few nurses are being brought into the fold, especially among young people.

Kaaren Neufeld, president of the Canadian Nurses Association (CNA), says the numbers tell a worrying story — while the CNA recently succeeded in graduating more than 9,300 new nurses in a single year for the first time in three decades, Neufeld says the country needs closer to 12,000 new nurses each year.

"There is a shortage of health-care practitioners in this country and working with the frail elderly in this country is something there will continue to be a strong need for," Neufeld said.

As many aging boomers develop increasing nursing needs, Neufeld insists more emphasis on continuing care instead of cures will be needed.

"We have to change the way health care is delivered in this country in order to meet the need of the population we're anticipating," Neufeld said.

Lisa Wiseman, president of private firm Eldercare Home Health Inc., which sends experienced registered nurses directly to elderly clients' own homes, says the lack of nurses is a problem not easily solved in the short term, since field experience is such a key part of successful nursing.

"Even if we graduated all the nurses we needed tomorrow, they still wouldn't have the experience. We're definitely heading into a crisis," Wiseman said.

Demand for nurses, who are already needed desperately in Canada, is expected to increase dramatically in the coming years.

"Even if we graduated all the nurses we needed tomorrow, they still wouldn't have the experience. We're definitely heading into a crisis."
Eldercare Home Health president

A big problem has been attracting young female nurses, since traditionally few men choose to enter the field.

Before the women's liberation movement, most women chose to enter either nursing or teaching as professions.

Now that women are increasingly being accepted in the working world, Wiseman says it's only natural that many are choosing a wide variety of professions. With the average age of a registered nurse hovering at around 47 years old, it's also obvious that relatively few young women are choosing to become nurses.

Still, with demand high and supply low, enterprising students who feel a calling to care for others like Jenna Hoyt, 28, are putting two and two together pursuing their dream of nursing. Hoyt recently graduated from the University of Toronto's Lawrence S. Bloomberg Faculty of Nursing and says her and her friends were being wooed to nursing positions almost instantly.

"From the moment we started nursing school, hospitals were lined up to recruit new nurses," Hoyt said.

Hoyt herself is heading to Ethiopia to provide nursing care and do humanitarian relief work and says of her friends who graduated, not one is still left looking for work.

"Anyone who wanted a job has a job. I actually feel a bit guilty leaving Canada because I know there's a shortage," she said.

With the increasing use of BlackBerrys to work remotely from home, many businesses may see their overtime funds dwindling away.

Legal spats may jump over hours

Should an employee get paid for reading a BlackBerry at the dinner table, sending an office e-mail or posting a job-related blog at home?

A spat at ABC News over paying writers to check their BlackBerries on their own time recently raised the issue, and such a dispute marks the leading edge of a deluge of unresolved and potentially heated cases to come, experts say.

The growing technical ability to work remotely, combined the growth of work-related legal disputes, is raising "lots of smaller-scope issues of this kind," said John Thompson, an expert in wage and hour law at Fisher & Phillips in Atlanta.

"We've never seen anything like it. Just the question of what is work and what isn't is a practically endless question," he said.

"It is going to drive to the surface all kinds of issues that nobody's ever thought of before."

At ABC, under a long-standing contract waiver, writers who sporadically checked their BlackBerries after hours did not incur time-and-a-half overtime pay.

The union, the Writers Guild of America, East, challenged the waiver when three new writers were hired, and the company responded by taking away all writers' BlackBerries, ABC said.

The waiver was quickly reinstated, said Jeffrey Schneider, senior vice-president of ABC News.

"We're glad to be back to the status quo where people can still check their BlackBerries without incurring time-and-a-half overtime, which turns very quickly into a very big bill for a news division like ours," he said.

"We absolutely want to compensate people for overtime that they work, but that does not cover simply checking your e-mail," he added. "That would cover substantial work that gets done."

Simply checking a BlackBerry was not the union's concern, said Lowell Peterson, executive-director of the Writers Guild, East. "Our folks are professionals. They're not going to start putting in overtime slips for 2.1 minutes.

"Our concern is we don't want this to grow into a major work commitment that people don't get paid for," he said.

The issue is not so much tapping out a brief message on a BlackBerry; it's the ability to write articles, post blogs, draft documents, research the Internet or sign contracts, all on a tiny, mobile, handheld gadget, experts say.

The case against Bush

True crime author argues U.S. president can be charged with murder

After having three of his books reach No. 1 on the New York Times best-sellers list, Vincent Bugliosi was dismayed his latest received a virtual "blackout" from the mainstream media.

That's because The Prosecution of George W. Bush for Murder lays out the legal case — citing evidence and establishing the jurisdiction of U.S. prosecutors — to seek an indictment against America's 43rd chief executive for the deaths of more than 4,000 U.S. soldiers in Iraq.

Bugliosi, whose 11 books include true crime stories Helter Skelter and Outrage, said the usual routine once a new book was released has been to fly to New York for a host of national television interviews.

"For this one, I did not go to New York City because not one single national television or cable show would have me on. It was a total, complete blackout. My publicist said that in her over 30 years in the business, she had never seen a book blacked out like this before," Bugliosi, 73, said in an interview.

GETTY IMAGES FILE

In his latest book, author Vincent Bugliosi makes a legal case for the prosecution of U.S. President George W. Bush.

Legal case

The Prosecution of George W. Bush for Murder lays out the legal case to seek an indictment against America's 43rd chief executive for the deaths of more than 4,000 U.S. soldiers in Iraq.

ABC Radio even turned down his publisher's effort to buy time on the network. Worse, his publisher couldn't find a U.S. company willing to produce an audio version of the book.

When filmmaker David Burke sought to do a documentary based on the book, not a single U.S. investor could be found. It was left to Jim Shaban, an entrepreneur in Windsor, Ont., to bankroll the project, which is nearing completion.

Peter Miller, Bugliosi's long-time literary manager and executive producer of the documentary, said the difficulty in finding a publisher and the subsequent reaction by the mainstream media should never have happened, considering that Bugliosi is among the most famous former prosecutors in the U.S. "He's not just some left-wing nut. But there were a lot of publishers who were just plain scared of it," Miller said.

Vanguard Press publisher Roger Cooper said he expected some reluctance from the media when it was released six months ago, because of the book's "controversial" nature.

Despite the lack of coverage, The Prosecution of George W. Bush for Murder has been on the Times best-sellers list for the past five weeks. But Cooper said it only got there through unconventional means — a word-of-mouth "grassroots" campaign, an Internet advertising effort by Vanguard and Bugliosi's pugnacious determination.

"Without any television or national radio coverage, the book managed to climb up the best-sellers list and be talked about in a `viral' way that I think is one of the new ways that we have to look at publishing books," Cooper said.

"My publicist said that in her over 30 years in the business, she had never seen a book blacked out like this before."
Vincent Bugliosi

A story in The New York Times last week about the book's poor reception finally prompted CNN and MSNBC to talk to Bugliosi.

Bugliosi said he means every word of his carefully researched tome and hopes a U.S. prosecutor will have the courage to seek an indictment when Bush he leaves office next year. "It's certainly the most powerful, explosive true-crime book I've ever written. It's identical to every other true-crime book I've ever written, in that I present the evidence, plus the applicable law, to prove my point," Bugliosi said.

Singer Katy Perry has defended her beau, Gym Class Heroes front man Travis McCoy, who was arrested recently for third-degree assault after allegedly striking an audience member in the head with his mike. "There are definitely two sides to every story and you always have to take (that) into account," Perry said. USMAGAZINE.COM

McKellen reveals past death threats

SPEAKING OUT Lord of the Rings star Sir Ian McKellen says he has received death threats in the past because of his sexuality, BBC News Online reports.

Speaking on the BBC's Andrew Marr Show, the actor, who came out in 1988, said the threats had "declined considerably" in recent years. "I think I've become rather boring to the public at large on this particular issue," he said.

Mariah's single up for remix in online contest

MUSIC Professionals and amateurs alike will have the chance to remix the third single from Mariah Carey's platinum-plus album E=MC2 via a contest hosted on a startup social network Web site for musicians, Billboard has learned.

Starting July 15, the complete stems of I'll Be Lovin' U Long Time, from Carey's Island release, will be made available to the members of Indaba Music, an online community for aspiring and established producers and artists.

"Mariah is the queen of the remix," manager Mark Sudack says, citing the pop star's work with dance producers like David Morales and Junior Vasquez, as well as hip-hop greats like Sean "Diddy" Combs. REUTERS

Substance behind wallpaper style

InteriorDivine

Last week, in our two part paint and paper guide, we covered paint so, by clever deduction, that means this week we're focussing on wallpaper. Constantly heralded as "on the way back," we're going to focus less on what's hot and what's not, and turn our attention instead to paper types.

Lining Paper:
Comes in several gauges, and is an effective way to even bumpy surfaces. The thicker the paper the more problems it will conceal. Designed to be painted or papered over with your final choice of finish.

Vinyl and vinyl backed:
Great for kitchens and bathrooms as both are washable and water-resistant.

Paintable plain wallpaper:
Comes in a variety of imprinted textures and, again, great for covering irregular walls. Can be painted to suit your scheme.

Foils:
These are available in a variety of choices (from retro to modern) and, due to their construction are often water resistant.

Flocked wallpaper:
While interesting, these are subject to fashion flux and also hard to clean. Good in low traffic areas where they'll attract less dust. We tend to limit applications to 'accent walls'. Tip: Pick out a background colour (or a softer tone thereof) for other walls.

Wood chip:
Torture to remove, so be warned! Dated and really only good to cover especially rough surfaces.

Relief:
Press printed with a raised pattern and available in loads of designs. Some have their own colour scheme while others are designed to be painted. Easy to hang and will disguise surface imperfections due to 'raised' nature.

Colin & Justin's The Home Show airs Tuesdays at 9 p.m., Saturdays at 7 p.m. and Sundays at 2 p.m. ET on HGTV. www.hgtv.ca top 10 wallpaper tips

1. Think twice and buy once! Head to your supplier and sign out pattern books to see how each paper looks.
2. Get tooled up! Assemble sharp scissors, plumb 'drop cord', a pasting table, a large brush and sponges to wipe down after each strip has been hung.
3. Small floral designs, from our experience, date more quickly so exercise caution when choosing.
4. Be careful with outsized designs and motifs — these are best in generous spaces. Bigger repeats can shrink smaller spaces.
5. Stripe strife! Many rooms aren't completely square, so striped paper may not line up with doors and trim. Use a spirit level to analyse your room and adjust paper accordingly.
6. For hallways and high traffic zones, opt for patterned washable wallpaper to disguise finger prints and scuffs.
7. Look for 'paste the wall' papers. As the name suggests, adhesive is applied directly to the wall as opposed to the paper. Cuts out lots of work!
8. While hanging, rub a lightly dampened sponge across paper to remove surplus adhesive that would otherwise detract from finished results.
9. To ensure you don't run out, overbuy and — with prior agreement — return unopened rolls.
10. Buy paper with the same 'batch number' to ensure shading is identical throughout your project.

DVDs to carry anti-smoking ads

FILM INDUSTRY Six major Hollywood film studios agreed on Friday to place anti-smoking ads on new movie DVDs targeted to children in a bid to counter the influence of tobacco use on screen. The studios joined forces with California health authorities in what was called an unprecedented agreement to protect children from the risks of smoking.

Under the deal, Sony Pictures, Universal Studios, Warner Bros., Paramount Pictures, Walt Disney Studios and Twentieth Century Fox will include anti-smoking advertisements in the opening minutes of DVDs of all new movies with smoking scenes that are rated G, PG and PG-13.

Those ratings are used to designate a film as being aimed primarily at kids. The anti-smoking commercials, produced by California's Tobacco Control Program, also will be targeted at children.

The ad will first be seen on the Sony DVD of 21 — a PG-13 drama about a casino scam.

"Placing these ads on DVDs will remind viewers that movies are fiction but the damage smoking does is real," said Lisa Paulsen, president of the Entertainment Industry Foundation, which aims to raise awareness of health and social issues. REUTERS

In brief

ARRESTED Josh Brolin was arrested on Saturday after a bar brawl in Louisiana, imdb.com reports. The actor was on a break from shooting his role as George W. Bush for Oliver Stone's upcoming biopic W, when he allegedly got involved in a bar fight. According to The Shreveport Times, the actor, as well as W co-star Jeffrey Wright, were arrested for trying to impede police who were splitting up the brawl. The pair received misdemeanour charges for interfering with police, according to Usweekly.com. Brolin was charged at the city jail and was forced to pay a $334 US cash bond.

MUSICAL Director Spike Lee is planning to make a film of the award-winning Broadway musical Passing Strange, BBC Online reports. Lee, known for movies such as Malcolm X and Do The Right Thing, will film the production on July 19, along with two more performances without audiences. The musical will then end its run in New York on the following day. It tells the tale of a young man's journey through sex, drugs and rock 'n' roll. Lee said he wanted "to do some things that have not been tried." METRO NEWS SERVICES

Grey's Dr. Stevens on life support?

IntelleVision

Rick McGinnis
rick.mcginnis@metronews.ca

IN CRITICAL CONDITION: Nothing perks up ratings — at least for a week or two, usually timed to coincide with sweeps week – than a death in the family. After her very public protest about the quality of the scripts she's been getting on Grey's Anatomy — manifested by taking herself out of the running for an Emmy nomination — Katherine Heigl has apparently put herself on life support, according to an E! Online story.

"It's not good there," a source told the E! reporter, talking about the Grey's Anatomy set. "Shonda is pissed. They're thinking of killing her off. They want Izzie dead."

Grey's creator Shonda Rhimes is, we're meant to understand, miffed about Heigl's protest, and is considering the exit of Dr. Isobel "Izzie" Stevens, her character, possibly during an outbreak of Ebola at Seattle Grace, or in a tragic blender accident.

Heigl's career has migrated from the small to the large screen with movies like Knocked Up and 27 Dresses, so it's not unfair to imagine that her Emmy rebuff was simply a calculated attempt to slip the bonds of whatever contract she might have with Rhimes and Grey's producers.

Tellingly, the E! story dutifully reported the sort of ritual exchange that inevitably suggest that the gears are grinding away while pretending otherwise:

"A rep for Rhimes said, 'I haven't heard anything about that.' Reps for Heigl and ABC declined to comment."

In Hollywood, if someone declines to comment about you, it means you should start packing — or running.

HB-WOE: HBO was the network that made quality cable, but that's two whole seasons and a hundred cultural years in the past, so it's about time for the network to make some concrete moves toward redemption before they're choking in the dust that FX, Showtime and AMC — AMC! Who could have seen that in an age before Mad Men? — is kicking up as they tear across the TV salt flats.

Actress Katherine Heigl plays Dr. Isobel "Izzie" Stevens in Grey's Anatomy.

A Hollywood Reporter story last week announced three new shows from the network — Treme, a drama set in post-Katrina New Orleans from The Wires David Simon and Eric Overmeyer, The Washingtonienne, a comedy based on a recent sex scandal in the U.S. capitol to be executive produced by Sarah Jessica Parker, and a drama set in '20s Atlantic City from Martin Scorsese and Sopranos writer Terrence Winter.

The network also confirmed that — act shocked — the proposed pair of Deadwood movies aren't happening, but they'd be — OK, make the "duh" face here — real happy to see a Sopranos movie or a Sex And The City 2.

And while we're at it, can celery taste like barbecue chips and puppies stay little forever?

Cary Grant gives one of his best performances in this 1959 Alfred Hitchcock classic as an adman whom enemy spies mistake for a government agent. Convinced they're trying to kill him, he goes on the run, hooking up with one of Hitch's coolest blondes (Eva Marie Saint). Watch for two classic scenes: Grant fleeing pursuers in a crop-dusting plane, and all the principals scrambling around Mount Rushmore for the taut climax. Oh, yeah, and that Freudian ending. 9 PM on TCM

CSI: Miami
This is why you should say no to drugs. A man suspected of carjacking turns up dead, and Horatio (David Caruso) and his team discover the dead man may have had ties to a powerful and dangerous drug lord involved in an offshore smuggling operation. Jolie good: It's boy, girl

TWINS Brad Pitt was at Angelina Jolie's side as she gave birth to a son and daughter Saturday at La Fondation Lenval hospital in Nice, France, People has confirmed.

"The babies are doing well. The operation went just perfectly," Dr. Michael Sussmann told People on Sunday. "Angelina is in very good spirits. Brad Pitt was at her side. He was there and all was well."

Sussmann confirmed the Nice Matin newspaper report that Jolie gave birth to a boy, Knox Leon, and a girl, Vivienne Marcheline, by caesarean section on Saturday night. Knox weighed 5.03 lbs, and Vivienne 5 lbs. The twins are the fifth and sixth children for Jolie, 33, and partner Brad Pitt, 44, who are already parents to Maddox, 6; Pax, 4; Zahara, 3; and Shiloh, 2.

"The mother and father are very, very happy," Sussmann said.

He said that the caesarean was moved forward "for medical reasons" so that the babies could be born "in the best conditions." He also said Jolie is expected to stay in the hospital for a few days.

T.O. reunion for A-Rod, daughter

VISIT Alex Rodriguez, who was in Toronto with the Yankees for a three-game weekend set against the Blue Jays, was reunited with his wife Cynthia (right) and his older daughter Natasha on Friday, where the trio dined at a downtown steakhouse. Last week, Cynthia Rodriguez filed for divorce amid rumours of an affair between Alex and Madonna. "Alex and Cynthia are going through really difficult times," A-Rod's attorney Alan Kluger tells Us magazine. "All of their decisions are going to be based upon what's in the best interest of their daughters."

A source told Usmagazine.com that the couple's other child, 11-week-old Ella, stayed home with an ear infection.

"It's not a great idea for [Ella] to fly," says the source. "But the older daughter was in Toronto with him this weekend. She flew there with her mom."

Cynthia Rodriguez told the New York Post Thursday that her family is "devastated" by their split.
